"Pringle at 100: preserving a legacy of service."

Have we ever considered the difference between the biblical diet and today's diet? Last Friday, this question was asked at a workshop on Healthy Nutrition held by the Jamaica Council of Churches in collaboration with the Food and Nutrition department of The Ministry of Health, Kingston and St. Andrew.

The Biblical diet, as plated in the scriptures, was a heavily plant-based diet that included ingredients like beans, grains, stews and herbs prepared as a farm-to-table experience. Fresh. One of the Biblical diet facilitators was the social context and what many now consider family constructs. Gender roles within the general biblical society found women in the homes with time dedicated to preparing healthy meals. The historical trajectory of development in itself shows just how societal evolutions have dictated operations within our families.

In today's context, our diet is determined by several things a few of which are:

- Industrialization, Innovation, and Globalization
- Food Security and Sustainability
- Socialization and Gender Roles

The farm-to-table experience has been mostly replaced by the need for convenience. As things evolve and societies move from hunters and gatherers to farmers and now corporate bosses, along with more knowledge and literature breeding more innovation, the need for convenience has been high.

Both genders spend less time in the home, as more women have joined men in the continued pursuit of academic and corporate success. With this, gastronomy is forfeited for fast-food and farming for importation. This lifestyle and value system has caused fewer people to be interested in the sustenance of the agriculture industry and fewer people to be in the kitchen.

Rising demands warrant a rise in supply and in a short space of time. That is what dictates what is stacked on our supermarket shelves. Thus, a lot of unhealthy processed foods; freezer meals, and tinned goods. Undoubtedly, even products labeled as organic is often times genetically modified and cannot be compared to the fresh healthy foods of Bible days.

Wedded with all of this is the tool of marketing. The popular saying, “what you eat defines you”, also speaks to lifestyle in terms of social class and groups that one fits in according to what’s on their plate and from which brand. Indulging in certain kinds and brands of food, especially certain fast-food brands through acculturation, associates one with social groups as the psychology of sales is exercised and more lifestyle brands such as Starbucks and other coffee shops are becoming more prevalent. It is the use of the understanding of psychology that boosts purchases. For example, the engagement of all the senses in advertisements across all platforms, the ability to convince others to indulge because people of influence are doing so and the use of the color theory to play on colors like orange and red to appeal to the taste buds.

Truthfully, to sustain healthy eating, especially in our Jamaican society, is difficult and expensive.

As we try to function in a fast pace and demanding environment with eroded boundaries, more people are troubled with mental health issues that affect diets, one of the most common being body dysphoria. Exploring diet not just as what we eat but how we prepare what we eat and how often we eat it, we can say that essentially it is our relationship with food. Notably, fad diets have become popular. Many people are trying to lose or gain weight to the detriment of their health and well-being to simply look a particular way. Contrary to this, one can argue that a Biblical diet was one of the practical expressions of faithfulness to stewardship and caring for the body as the Lord’s temple. Now, we choose to be ignorant of how our relationship with food is affecting our overall health.

The workshop hosted several church representatives across country from different denominations and was held at the Providence Methodist Church Auditorium.

The Jamaica Council of Churches has prepared materials to teach us how to care for our bodies through Food and Nutrition. You can access the toolkit of sermons at:

Responding With Righteousness & Justice

For both the prophet Isaiah and Jesus, responding to human need and suffering must be given priority over simply observing the rites and rituals of one’s religion. The response that is required must be sensitive and relevant, even if it does not fit with “tradition”.

St. John's United Church in Hannah Town Aims to Use Sports as a Tool of Evangelism

Spectrum Management Authority donates sports equipment to St John's United Church in Hannah Town for youth/community ministry.

On any evening, at least thirty to fifty youngsters, ages eight to 17, from beyond Hannah Town gather on the compound of the church where they play sports or just hang out. The game of choice is mostly football in the scrimmage format. The church has provided a safe space for them and the church has identified and embraced this as a ministry opportunity.

Matches are being organized around church schedule so that ministry, church school and youth fellowship, may be offered using a different approach and format.

As such, we are seeking to further develop what we have here. Already, Spectrum Management Authority has graciously donated some equipment for which there are not enough words to express our gratitude. Other donations have made it possible for four courts to have been painted on the recently paved (concrete) grounds-scrimmage, netball, Volleyball, and basketball (half court) and we are just as hopeful and as we are grateful for the kindness ushered to this project so far.

We are hoping to get additional equipment such as poles and hoops for volleyball, netball and basketball, and a supply of balls for scrimmage football as they go rather quickly.

We try to provide snacks for the youngsters - simple bag juice and biscuits.

We pray for help and resources to make the ministry sustainable and viable. Food, gear, equipment, personnel and time are needed.

For the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven.
